Steps also were under way to prepare for flight a new test satellite identical to the one that met misfortune on the launching pad here Friday, just before noon.

Already on hand, said Vanguard executive J. Paul Walsh, is another complete three-stage Martin rocket, a twin of the one that blew up on an attempted vertical takeoff yesterday.

It rests in the Martin Co. hangar at the closely guarded Missile Test Center, one among many strange looking sky monsters awaiting their brief moments of

"We can move it out as soon as the launching stand is ready to accept it," Walsh said.

President Eisenhower ordered the Defense Department to give him a full account of what happened and why.

He was described by Presidential Press Secretary James C. Hagerty as being, in a word, disappointed."

So was the man in charge of Project Vanguard, 49-year-old Dr. John P. Hagen of the Naval Research Laboratory in Washington. Today, the 16th anniversary of the Navy's near-destruction by Japanese sneak bombers at Pearl Haroor, he studied movies and photographs of the ill-fated satellite launching yesterday at Cape Caniveral, Fla.

The report Hagen makes will go to Eisenhower. Then doubtless it will be revealed in some form to the American people, their aroused representatives in Congress and a world whose initial reaction to the launching failure ranged from jeers to sympathy.

The missile misfortune was another in a series of scientific setbacks dealt the United States by For Next Year backs dealt the United States by the Soviets as 1957 drew to a close.
